Many spells come with obvious effects: fiery explosions, walls of ice, teleportation. Others, like Charm Person, have no visible, audible, or perceptible sign: those who are not affected probably don't notice them. In general, you don't know a spell was cast unless it produces a noticeable effect.

🎲 Quick summary: identifying a spell

1. Only a non-instantaneous spell whose duration is ongoing can be identified.
2. You identify it by its observable effects.
3. You must take the Study action.
4. Succeed on an Intelligence (Arcana) check, DC 15.

⚠ Noticing a spellcaster: Table rule

- To be noticeable, the casting must include a Verbal, Somatic, or Material component. The form of the Material component doesn't matter.
- If the caster can do without components (a Sorcerer's Subtle Spell, innate spellcasting of many creatures), the casting is imperceptible.
- If an imperceptible casting produces a noticeable effect, you normally can't tell who cast the spell without other clues.

⚠ Change from 2014

Identification goes through the Study action with a fixed DC of 15, and only for an ongoing spell.

⚠ Flaw in the rule and fixes Table rule

An instantaneous spell (like Fireball) can't be identified by this rule, yet players often want to know what was just cast. Fix: the DM describes the effects, or allows the table method on the How to play page.

💡 Narrative option: Table rule

The DM can describe the casting's signature without naming the spell: whispered words, precise gestures, a glow on the focus, a whiff of sulfur, a chill in the air.

Step 1 – Notice the casting: Table rule

An observer notices a spell being cast if they hear the words (Verbal), see the gestures (Somatic), or see the Material component.

Step 2 – Imperceptible casting: Table rule

If the caster does without components (Subtle Spell, innate spellcasting), nobody notices the casting. If the effect is visible, it is hard to tell who cast it.

Step 3 – Observe the effects:

An explosion or a wall of ice is noticed at once. A spell with no visible effect, like Charm Person, goes unnoticed by those who are not affected.

Step 4 – Identify an ongoing spell:

The spell must be non-instantaneous and its duration ongoing. You take the Study action and succeed on an Intelligence (Arcana) DC 15 check.

Example: a mage maintains a Web spell. Léa (Arcana +5) studies its effects and rolls 10: 10 + 5 = 15, she identifies the spell.

Table rule: instantaneous spells and observed casting Table rule

The author's proposal, absent from the SRD. The DM announces it before the game.

- When: as a reaction during the casting, or with an action on your turn after the casting.
- Condition: the character perceived the casting, the spell's effect, or both.
- Check: Intelligence (Arcana), DC 15 + the spell's level.

Common table questions.

What about a magic or cursed item?

This sheet covers spells only. To learn an item's properties, its attunement, or its curse, see the Identifying a Magic Item sheet.

Can I identify Fireball?

Not with the Study action: the spell is instantaneous. The DM describes the effects, or applies the table rule. Table rule

Do I need to see the caster?

You need to perceive the observable effect of the ongoing spell. To notice the casting itself, see the How to play page.

What is a "non-instantaneous" spell?

A spell whose duration is not Instantaneous (Concentration, minutes, hours…) and that is still active.

Does the DC change with the spell's level?

Not in 2024: the DC is a flat 15. With the table rule, it becomes 15 + the spell's level. Table rule

⚠ Rule clarifications (answers found on the web, reworded):

Telling if an effect is magical

The game text says whether an effect is magical. Effects from spells and magic items always are.

Class spells

A spell is a class spell only if it appears on that class's list, unless a feature says otherwise.
