Level 9 – Conjuration
Casting Time: Action · Range: Self
Components: V · Duration: Instantaneous
Classes: Sorcerer, Wizard

Wish is the mightiest spell a mortal can cast. Its basic use: duplicate any other spell of level 8 or lower, with no requirements for that spell (including costly components).

Other uses, your choice: Object Creation (a nonmagical object worth up to 25,000 GP, up to 300 ft per dimension, on the ground in an unoccupied space you can see); Instant Health (you and up to 20 visible creatures regain all HP, ending the effects of Greater Restoration); Resistance (up to 10 visible creatures gain permanent Resistance to one damage type); Spell Immunity (up to 10 creatures, 8 hours); Sudden Learning (replace a feat with another); Roll Redo (force a reroll of a d20 roll from the last round); Reshape Reality (a free wish, subject to the DM's approval).

Stress: any use other than duplicating a spell weakens you: until a Long Rest, each spell you cast deals you 1d10 Necrotic damage per spell level (can't be reduced); your Strength drops to 3 for 2d4 days (2 fewer days for each day of light rest); 33% chance you can never cast Wish again.

🎲 Quick summary:

1. Basic use: duplicate a level 8 or lower spell, no components.
2. Other uses: a precise list (objects, health, resistance, etc.).
3. Reshape Reality: at the DM's discretion.
4. Any use other than duplication causes stress.

⚠ Flaw in the rule and fixes Table rule

The text gives the DM great interpretive power over the "free wish". Fix: announce before the game what the DM will accept, and discuss it.

💡 Narrative option: Table rule

The DM can describe a wish taking shape in a blinding glow, at the price of trembling hands.

Step 1 – Choose the use:

The player announces whether they duplicate a spell (no stress) or choose another use from the list (stress).

Step 2 – Duplicate a spell:

Choose a level 8 or lower spell: it is cast with no requirements (no components, even costly ones).

Step 3 – Other use:

Announce the effect from the list; or make a free wish: the DM decides.

Step 4 – Stress:

After any other use: Necrotic damage with each spell cast until a Long Rest, Strength 3 for 2d4 days, 33% chance of never casting Wish again.

Example: Orion (level 17 Wizard) casts Wish to duplicate Power Word Kill (level 9): impossible, level 9. He chooses Hold Monster (level 5): no stress, no components.

⚠ Common questions:

What level can I duplicate?

Level 8 or lower.

Do I need components?

Not when duplicating a spell: no requirements.

When is there stress?

For any use other than duplicating a spell.

What does stress do?

Necrotic damage with each spell cast, Strength 3 for 2d4 days, 33% chance of never casting Wish again.

Can I wish for anything?

At the DM's discretion: the bigger, the riskier.

Can I wish for a god's death?

The DM decides: the text speaks of unforeseen consequences. Table rule

Can I cast Wish more than once?

Yes, unless stress takes it away forever (33%).

Can the stress damage be reduced?

No: it can't be reduced or prevented.

⚠ Debate points and table options:

Table rule

Free wish

Anything is possible "with the DM's approval". Option: the DM refuses effects that bypass the game; or grants a partial or twisted version.

Literal wish

The DM may read the words literally. Option: announce before the game that the DM won't try to trap players.

Stress

Stress is severe. Option: soften it (33% → 10%); or keep it for free wishes only.

Duplicating a spell

The duplicated spell has no requirements: costs can be bypassed. Option: refuse spells with very costly components that produce a unique item.

Spell Immunity

"A spell or magical effect" is vague. Option: one precise spell, named at the time of the wish.

⚠ Rule clarifications (answers found on the web, reworded):

Wish and Twinned Spell

A spell duplicated by Wish can receive the Twinned Spell Metamagic option, if it meets that option's requirements.

Consumed components

A spell consumes its components only if its description says so. Wish ignores the duplicated spell's requirements, including costly components.

Spell level

A spell cast without a slot is cast at its lowest level, unless stated otherwise.
